RESEARCH UNIT BOARD OF DEPUTIES OF BRITISH JEWS

The Board of Deputies of British Jews, founded in 1901, is the representative body of the Anglo-Jewish community. The Research Unit was established in 1965 following a conference on Jewish Life in Modern Britain which the Board convened in 1962 in association with the Institute of Contemporary Jewry of the Hebrew University, Jerusalem. The Unit compiles statistical data on various aspects of the community, and prepares interpretive studies of social and demographic trends. It functions under a special Committee of the Board, comprising the Honorary Officers, lay members and academic advisers.

INTRODUCTION

Membership of a synagogue is the most widely held point of identity for British Jews. All contemporary studies in this country have shown that synagogue membership covers around two-thirds of identifying Jews. The formation of a synagogue or congregation does not necessitate a building or even a minister. Membership is a voluntary act and requires payment of membership dues. The figures which follow therefore relate to fee paying members as at the latter part of 1976 and early 1977.

This publication can only give a rough guide to population figures. Firstly, it includes only the synagogue affiliated Jewish population. Secondly, there is a small amount of over-enumeration because of the possibility of dual membership by individuals. Detailed research on 5,500 households in Redbridge suggests multiple membership is less than 2 per cent. Thirdly, in some of the London boroughs affiliation is unrealistic with regard to residence. Notably, in Tower Hamlets there is a generation lag as many former residents of the borough retain membership for sentimental reasons, and in Westminster social prestige rather than convenient access is often the motivation for membership of the many large, fashionable synagogues. The lack of synagogues in Barking, Bexley, Islington and Southwark reflects the small number of Jews living in these boroughs, not their total absence. This is particularly evident in the case of Barking, where the nearest synagogue (Barking & Becontree) is just inside the borough of Redbridge, yet as its name suggests, it draws its membership largely from Barking. Outside London similar patterns occur. In areas of sparse Jewish population a synagogue in a particular town often draws its membership from a wide area and there can be overlapping 'catchments' between synagogues. The most important caveat, however, relates to female membership which is dealt with in the note below.

The number of male synagogue members has fallen by 6 per cent since 1970.* The major part of this loss has been from Greater London. Some can be accounted for by migration to the surrounding counties and some to a decline in multiple memberships as a reaction to rapidly increasing synagogue fees during the 1970s. Increased running costs have also resulted in the closure and amalgamation of synagogues. This has led to a decline in the number of synagogue buildings from 315 in 1970 to 315 in 1977 and the number of actual congregations from 368 to 351.

The distribution of membership among the various religious groupings shows a marked preponderance of the Central Orthodox outside London. The capital offers a variety of types of synagogue to its large Jewish population. Only Greater Manchester shares this heterogeneity. Comparative figures of the proportional breakdown over time are only available for Greater London and these show a relatively static position. They accord well with recent annual returns of marriage figures which have indicated a growth in the right-wing Orthodox grouping.

NOTE ON FEMALE SYNAGOGUE MEMBERSHIP

Certain adjustments have had to be made in respect of female membership because of the different policies towards women. In Orthodox synagogues married women are not counted as members unless they themselves join and pay an individual subscription, whereas in Progressive Synagogues (Reform and Liberal) women and men have equal membership and total membership therefore often includes two adults per household. In order to produce uniform statistics, the following categories have been used in estimating female membership:-

*The source for all 1970 figures in the text is S.J. Prais, 'Synagogue Statistics and the Jewish Population of Great Britain 1900-1970', The Jewish Journal of Sociology, XIV (1972), 215 - 228.

- a) Where membership lists were available, the actual numbers of households having no male members were counted. These are identified in the text with the letter a.
- b) Where synagogues have recorded individual female membership these statistics have been used.
- c) Where synagogues have presented a sex breakdown of their membership and the female number exceeds the male, the excess figure is taken to account for individual female membership. In these cases only the difference between female and male membership is included in our statistics. These are identified in the text with the letter c.
- d) Where no breakdown by sex was available we have estimated numbers. Numbers of females have been bracketed and excluded from the total female membership figure.

By this method, the totals of female membership recorded comprise women, widows, divorcees, and some married women who choose to hold membership in their own right. In most Orthodox synagogues this last group is a small minority of the female membership. Stamford United Synagogue is an exception to this rule in that a local membership drive encouraged women to hold individual membership. These figures do not provide a conclusive evidence of female and male headed households; their value is in estimating the approximate number of synagogue affiliated households.
